PROPHETS AND HEDGE

Local Outlook Dubious in the Illinois Campaign.

STATE TICKET REPUBLICAN

Some Districts, Normally Democratic, Likely to Revert.

LANDSLIDE WILL NOT REPEAT

Best Estimates Obtainable Give the Democrats Seven Members in the New State Delegation.

Special Dispatch to The Star.

CHICAGO, November 3.—The whirlwind finish of the political campaign in Illinois practically ended tonight with almost unlimited oratory, much music of the so-called patriotic sort and pyrotechnics galore, mostly red fire. In the last three days the storm centers of the spellbinders' efforts and the energetic work of the managers of the two old and the innumerable new parties, styled by old politicians as the "butting-in gangs," have been Chicago and all the city congressional districts and the leading ones out in the state. The excitement and noise incident to the close of the campaign were in marked contrast to the tameness which characterized the two months preceding the day of the battle of the ballots.

Predictions, with very few exceptions, even by the most experienced and usually confident expert political prognosticators, are made with a degree of reservation that detracts considerably from the value of the prophecies. All the prophets of hitherto good repute, whose statements have always been regarded as absolutely reliable, if not infallible, seem to be up in the air as to general results and are unable to satisfy the ever-demanding faithful partisans for forecasts of victory in sight for all that is being contested. The few exceptions, where the party or parties are so sure to assure success include the state ticket, certain congressional and state assembly districts, with no line or hint whatever that is not in some way qualified as regards the local election, which in the eyes of some of the biggest political leaders and their adherents is of greater consequence than the struggle for the state offices, congressmen and members of the legislature.

Must Get Out the Vote.

The claim of the republican leaders of Illinois that their entire state ticket will be elected is possibly well founded, as also is the declaration that the republicans will continue in control of the legislature by a good working majority in both houses. The democratic state managers practically concede these claims. The confidence of the G. O. P. state leaders is further borne out by the only complete poll of the state which has ever been taken and which has just been finished. It indicates republican success by substantial pluralities. A final round of district and precinct leaders took place two days ago, and reports showed that all organizations were in fine shape. Instructions were given by the leaders to their lieutenants and workers, with positive injunctions to leave nothing undone up to and including election day to bring out the full vote and all the votes possible.

gathering in during the campaign. According to Chairman West of the republican state committee the poll of the state was not at all satisfactory, but removed any apprehensions that might have been entertained by timid partisans. It has demonstrated that a strong and solid vote is gathered in during the campaign. According to Chairman West of the republican state committee the poll of the state was not at all satisfactory, but removed any apprehensions that might have been entertained by timid partisans. It has demonstrated that a strong and solid vote is gathered in during the campaign.

Democratic Quarrels.

The democratic state organization has been and is so rent by factional quarrels, revivals and divisions that it has only hope of getting enough state legislators elected to maintain its position as the minority in the general assembly. The campaign conducted by the state leaders has been desultory, every candidate for office, even the state nominees, looking after their own interests from the time the convention put them on the ticket until the end of the campaign.

The fight William J. Bryan made on National Committeeman Sullivan, who is now the boss of the state organization and the opposition to him by the party elements antagonistic to the clique in control, all have served to split up the Illinois democracy so badly that there is not now any general cohesion to the welfare of the party. This long ago destroyed whatever hopes the Illinois democrats had heretofore of bettering their position. It has been in the period of chaos with the disrupted republican party in the state.

Aside from the strong fight they have made in the congressional districts where they are normally in the majority, but which they lost through republican victories in the Roosevelt landslide in 1904, the democrats have given more attention to and made more desperate struggles for success with the county ticket and the Chicago judicial nominees, counting possible victory with these as stepping-stones to strengthening the general organization in Cook county, the biggest and most populous of the state. It has been a period of chaos with the disrupted republican party in the state.

November 6 will be a busy day from the moment the polls open until they close for the wielders of the pencil. This certainly is what has put the political prophets "up in the air" as regards the outcome of the local contest, which overshadows the more important struggle and makes its effect an uncertain factor so far as concerns the issue in the congressional and legislative races. Non-partisanship in Chicago and Cook county has gone to the utmost extreme, with it, it is asserted, a mass of entangling deals by certain straight party nominees to trade off others of their candidates to get the secret support and votes of the opposition organization in some districts.

Conference of Leaders.

In the last few days Chicago has been the Mecca of the republican leaders, who came together to hold a political experience meeting under the auspices of the state committee, whereat the order was passed to be sure to leave nothing undone to "get out the vote." Senator Hopkins was present—his colleague, Senator Cullom, could not come—also Gov. Deneen, the party's shrewdest and most expert whip-flogger; the nominees on the state ticket, former Representative Walter Reuther, Representatives Furrer, Rives and Snapp; ex-United States Senator William E. Mason, former Lieut. Gov. W. A. Northcott and a host of lesser lights, who are probably closer to the rank and file of the party men. The exchange of views and information established confidence in the assertion of the state chairman that the straight party dominant in the campaign had largely been overcome and the interest of the voters finally aroused to the necessity and importance of not only being sure to go to the polls next Tuesday, but to get out the day before and help whip in line the recalcitrants.

It also developed at this love feast that while there was not a superabundance of campaign funds in the hands of the state committee, there were a few thousands of dollars on hand that could be used for advantageous work in close congressional and state senatorial districts. Apparently, with out announcing any final decision in the matter, it was the understanding that the money would be used that way.

The last days of the campaign, ending with Saturday, there was unusual activity at all the headquarters, and scores of meetings were held day and night, the proportion in Chicago and in the rural districts being three republican gatherings to every democratic and independent assemblage. The rallies drew big crowds and the spellbinders were unusually eloquent. The music was constant and the red fire burned incessantly. It reminded old campaigners of the burrah methods of some thirty years ago. With all the confidence they feel of a real victory in the state contest, the republicans are only reasonably satisfied that they will win in the local contest. They are more than the city and county, not quite completed yesterday, furnished figures that encouraged the leaders. The only unsatisfactory feature of the canvass is the large number of voters reported "doubtful," and the experience of the leaders has shown them that most of the "doubtfuls" don't vote the straight republican ticket. The democrats have made no poll of the state and no canvass of the city or county. Their estimates as to results are based on guesses or such information as is brought to general headquarters by district and precinct leaders and workers.

Chances in Chicago.

The outlook in the congressional contests in the twenty-five districts of the state, while insuring a republican majority of the delegation by a large margin, indicates at this time that the republicans will be the sufferers next Tuesday and the democrats good gainers. Instead of having one lone representative in Congress from the state of Illinois, as is the case now, the democrats are pretty sure to win six more, giving them seven members in the new delegation. Three districts in the city of Chicago now held by the republicans and four outside, or country section, are just now considered doubtful. The districts are normally democratic by good majorities, but slipped away in the landslide when Roosevelt was elected President. But now, after the democrats have strained every nerve to win, it is considered likely that the fourth, fifth and eighth districts in Chicago and the twenty-first, twenty-third, sixteenth and twenty-fourth will swing back to the democratic column.

In Chicago it looks as if the republicans would sustain the probable loss of three congressmen. These are Wharton, in the fourth; Michael, in the fifth; counted as certain to meet defeat, and McGavin, in the eighth. McGavin's friends claim he has a very good show to pull through. The present congressmen from Chicago who are figured to win re-election are Madden, first district; Mann, second; Wilson, third; Lorrimer, sixth; Knopf, seventh; Boutwell, ninth, and Foss, in the tenth, all republicans.
